Dedicated to their sports

Four young sports stars talk about their lives.

Darius (runner) I've always been sporty. I played a bit of everything at one time, but I was best at football and athletics. When I was 14, I had a trial for a professional football club, but eventually I decided to go down the athletics route instead. My biggest moment came when I got to compete for my country in the youth team and got a medal. It did not result in much media attention, though, which was a shame. I'd been hoping some sponsorship would come out of it, because the training doesn't come cheap. I train at home all winter and then go away for three weeks, usually Florida, before the season starts. It's good fun - there are great athletics facilities there and the nightlife's great, too. You've got to be really disciplined, though. If friends ask me to go out the night before training, I have to say no. I wish I didn't, but dedication pays in this sport. The main goal for me is to get to the next Olympics - that would be fantastic.	C Dieter (yacht racer) With five lads on a boat together, you have a good laugh. We're very traditional and we always celebrate a win in great style. It's been said that we act a bit childish when we're out, but we don't actively go looking for media coverage. Sometimes the reporters actually seem more concerned about where you go out celebrating and what you get up to there than about where you came in the race. I'm away for eight months of the year, so it's great to get back, go out with my mates from other walks of life and do the things they do. You can't live, eat and breathe the sport all the time - it's not healthy. I'm known within the world of sailing, but fortunately I can count the number of times I've been recognised in the street on the fingers of one hand. I'd hate to become some sort of celebrity. I get a lot of nice letters from people wanting signed pictures, though. It may take ages, but I reply to every one. It would be cheeky to complain, even if it does take a bit of organising.
B Gabriel (surfer) The surfing community is small, so you get to meet the same guys wherever you compete. Professional surfers are very serious and often the best waves are early in the morning, so if you're really going to get anywhere, you have to cut out late-night parties altogether. I don't mind that so much, but I do love having a lie-in, and I usually have to give that up too. But it's worth it because without that kind of dedication I might not have won the National Championships last year. I make sure that a big night out follows any win. If - there's cash involved in the winnings, I'll go away somewhere really nice. And, of	D Tomas (tennis player) It's always a great thing to walk on court and feel that the crowd's behind you. At the last tournament, though, it all got a bit crazy with people crowding around. Despite that, I have to admit that I do still get quite a thrill out of being seen by fans when I'm out shopping or something. It has its downside though. My last girlfriend didn't like it if I got too much attention from female fans. The thing is, tennis players have to travel quite a lot, and in the end, that's why we split up, I guess. That was hard, but you've got to make sacrifices in any sport; you've got to be serious and professional. course, the sacrifices are worth it in the long run because winning that championship meant I got picked to present a surfing series on TV. I guess I'm a bit of a celebrity now.

Name: _____ Vorname: _____ Kandidatennummer: _____

Actually, it doesn't really bother me too much.
I'm content to concentrate on my game now and catch up on the other things in life once I've retired, because, after all, that comes pretty early in this sport.

Part 4: Writing

Colin, an English-speaking friend of yours who makes films for a local TV company in Ireland has sent you the following e-mail. Read Colin's message and the notes you have made. Then write your e-mail back, using all your notes.

Guess what? The director of the TV company has asked me to make a short film for Irish visitors to your town.

I'll be in charge of a film crew of six so I'll be my first big experience.
The team and I could come for one week either in February or in August.

Name: _____ Vorname: _____ Kandidatennummer: _____

What do you think would be better?

In the film we'd like to show a place that's a bit unusual but that would still interest the average Irish tourist. Is there something interesting that tourists normally don't visit?

Finally, we'll definitely need someone to give us a tour of the town. Do you know someone suitable who might be able to help us?

Please write back soon.

Colin

Notes:

- Great idea!
- Say when would be better and why
- Tell Colin about that special place
- Offer to help

Sample answer

Hi Colin

It was great to hear from you and your fantastic news! Even more as good old Thun'll become famous to you Irish.

You ask about whether February or August would be better to make your film. Well honestly I think the region has got more charm in the summer with the lake and all the outdoor activities you can choose from.

A definite must for any tourist is the Mill Square in the heart of the town. You can stay outside for ages enjoying a cool drink served by one of Thun's street restaurants and cafés in the town centre. There is also a delicious variety of international meals to choose from which are also served al fresco. It gives you the feeling of being somewhere in the south and what is more you'll meet so many relaxed people having a great time.

Name: _____ Vorname: _____ Kandidatennummer: _____

What is more, I'll be off work in August and would simply love to help you and your team in anyway possible. I'd even carry props and fetch coffee for you.

Hope to hear from you soon.

Cheers!
